A MESSAGE FROM THE CAPTAIN OF THE SS LEGOOSTERDAM

Day 6

I may have overestimated my control of the situation here on the LEGOost-erdam. First things first- the aliens. Multiple spacecraft have alighted on the Observation Deck. So far their intentions seem benign, but who can say?

I hope they wash their hands wherever they come from. Several celebrities have been spotted on deck. In addition to the scruffy-looking guitarist who is somehow still walking the plank, I saw Harry Potter wielding a sword and cape on the Verandah deck. He seems to have had a...disagreement...with a number of other Sea Monkeys. Maybe I can ask Wonder Woman to look into it?

Finally, I have found the large glowing orb on the Bridge to be oddly soothing. I often find myself gazing into its depths to see amoeboids of color change, ebb, and then flow in waves. Within me, a daunting awareness of my own fail-ings is rising. Yet the orb assures me I am safe and loved. Incrementally, the orb and I becoming one. Did I say that right? "One"?

This may be my final message. Tell Mother I love her. - C

FORMAL NIGHT

If there's one thing we've learned, it's that Sea Monkeys have style. Lots of different styles, in fact.

Tonight, we dust off our mustaches and adjust our spats, don our elegant evening gowns and maybe break out that belted Norfolk tweed jacket we've been dying to try. You know the one we mean. That's right: it's formal night. A concept that's like, really, really old [editor's note: is that really the best we can do? Where's the staff historian?], formal nights allow the sartorially inclined to express their esteem for each other and for the Cruise itself.

As the old saying goes: "Clothes make the Monkey." So whether you favor a tuxedo and ascot, or a little black dress, or the always popular toga virilis, we can't wait to see you classy Sea Monkeys around the ship. Also note: its optional! You should still do what you feel most like doing. We'll be doing this!
